This week: a bold prospectus from Richard Florida on how the U.S. can get back on its feet, a stunning debut collection of short stories by Robin Black, Kai Bird's penetrating memoir about growing up in Israel-Palestine, another classic Baldacci thriller, and a moving novel from Sue Miller about the aftershocks of 9/11.

The Great Reset
by Richard Florida

How the U.S. economy will re-start itself after years of excess and mismanagement

Is it possible that the economic crisis might actually turn out to be a good thing? According to Richard Florida, author of The Rise of the Creative Class, it just might be. Based on an analysis of the United States economy in the wake of past downturns such as the Great Depression or the 19th-century Long Depression, Florida argues that we are poised for what he terms a "Great Reset" which could potentially reconfigure the entire U.S. economic infrastructure, from the way we approach home ownership to public transportation. The editor of Wired magazine called The Great Reset "must reading for anyone who wants to understand where we are now and where we are headed," and is a breath of fresh air for anyone hoping that Americans (and economists) will learn from their past mistakes.
