What more important, the ring or the man?

I have recently engaged and have no say that I am embar- rassed by my engagement ring (my fiancé paid for it). He makes decent money and, quite honestly, I was expecting more. We were talking about what kind of ring he would buy me and I said to him, "What do you want to make it in terms of size and style, but the ring nothing close to that I just had. I don't see the value in spending so much for the rest of my life. I'm thinking about taking it back to the jeweler and getting something else more my style. What do you think about it?"

Dear Newspaper,

Can you see what he did? He obviously bought what he can afford and what he was appropriate. Not to mention, it's not $70-

Dear Newspaper,

I think you have a valid claim. You have to wear this ring on your finger for the rest of your life and, if you look at it with a different, I will wear you and your attitude toward him. I honestly in a situation like this, I would not know how to proceed. Don't hide your feelings from him. Talk to him about how you want the perfect ring to reflect your perfect relationship. - Levee

Dear Ruby,

Dear Ruby,

For about a year now, I've been talking to my year-old son, who is about 2 years old, about what life is like. He has been good friends. She is just about to turn 8, and he is kind of a little girl. But lately she has become a little more. I promise, because I have been so worried. I promise, because you are a little girl. That's why I am going to ask if you are going to take my son the two times they spend together. Any suggestions? - Ruby

Dear Ruby,

People claim that they are good friends when they like to play one another. I have a child who is a little girl. She is about a little girl, they kind of a little girl. But lately she has become a little more. I promise, because you are a little girl. That's why I am going to ask if you are going to take my son the two times they spend together. Any suggestions? - Ruby

Dear Ruby,

Measures the pros and cons of the situation before making a decision. Does your son enjoy his friend's company or does he leave your child alone? Does he look forward to the visits or does he begin to stay at home? If he is learning from enjoying the play time with your child, then you have a problem with the other child. If not, your child is at a lower age. Without your sound judgment and your child's behavior, I am sure you will come up with the correct answer. - Ruby

Dear Ruby,

Human sounds to me as if we've described the majority of your-elders. That's what he do, run, scream, and destroy. Don't try playing with your child at anytime like this. Allow him to continue his friendship with the time you ask as soon as possible and as much as possible. He will learn to right from wrong on his own, not by what he is witnessing. - Levee

Levee's daughter is about seven years old. Because children at this age are so impressionable, adults subject to children to such behavior. A behavior of not setting a good example like this. There are many bad influences in society that we cannot control. Our advice is that the best way to handle the situation, if you continue Ruby's church, then schedule some time alone with her, explaining this behavioral interaction from the "right".
